written by Joel Kotkin. Earlier in this decade, cities—the bigger and denser the better—appeared as the planet's geographic stars. According to Benjamin Barber, author of the 2013 book If Mayors Ruled the World, everyone would be better off if the ineffective, aging nation-state were replaced by rule from the most evolved urban areas. This, Barber argues, would provide the “building blocks” of global governance run by a “parliament of mayors.”.

Our latest Freakonomics Radio episode is called “If Mayors Ruled the World.” (You can subscribe to the podcast at iTunes, get the RSS feed, or listen via the media player above. You can also read the transcript, which includes credits for the music you’ll hear in the episode.) The episode expands on an idea from political theorist Benjamin Barber, whose latest book is called If Mayors Ruled the World: Dysfunctional Nations, Rising Cities.

If Mayors Ruled the World - Dysfunctional Nations, Rising ...

Barber’s new book, If Mayors Ruled the World, is both an argument for local authority and an angry screed against national governments all over the world. “Cities should rule the world for a good...

Mayors Won’t Rule the World - Quillette

It often seems like federal-level politicians care more about creating gridlock than solving the world's problems. So who's actually getting bold things done? City mayors. So, political theorist Benjamin Barber suggests: Let's give them more control over global policy. Barber shows how these "urban homeboys" are solving pressing problems on their own turf -- and maybe in the world.

If Mayors Ruled the World: Dysfunctional Nations, Rising ...

We would all be a lot better off if, as he puts, it "mayors ruled the world." The thesis is particularly compelling coming from Barber, who did not start his career as an urbanist but rather spent...

If Mayors Ruled the World: Dysfunctional Nations, Rising Cities. In the face of the most perilous challenges of our time—climate change, terrorism, poverty, and trafficking of drugs, guns, and people—the nations of the world seem paralyzed. The problems are too big, too interdependent, too divisive for the nation-state.

If Mayors Ruled the World | Yale University Press

If mayors ruled the world, the more than 3.5 billion people (over half of the world's population) who are urban dwellers and the many more in the exurban neighborhoods beyond could participate locally and cooperate globally at the same time—a miracle of civic "glocality" promising pragmatism instead of politics, innovation rather than ideology, and solutions in place of sovereignty.

If Mayors Ruled the World: Dysfunctional

Nations, Rising ...

I would argue that the current generation of mayors, described in the book, is successful precisely because they do not rule the world. They are successful because they are allowed to focus on smaller, more immediate, more local responsibilities, which means that their efforts by definition generate quicker and more visible results.
